

Moving

from Sittard to Eindhoven

I put this in a table for a better look:

skill	elaboration
Planning and organization	I had to schedule key appointments, like receiving and returning keys, while making sure everything was packed and ready. I usually had this done by H2S on email or with my account on their webpage.
Time management	Since I had school right before and after the move, I had to balance both without falling behind with the lectures. I had informed teachers before whether I'd be late or absent that day to this reason.
Problem solving	I had to find ways to transport my things, sometimes taking them on the train, which required quick thinking and adaptability.
Resilience & independence	The constant trips between Sittard and Eindhoven were exhausting, but I kept going, knowing I had to get it done.
Stress management	Dealing with deadlines, traveling, and school at the same time taught me to stay calm under pressure.

Reflection

This experience showed me how important good planning is, especially when balancing multiple responsibilities. Although I feel like there were places I could've planned better especially since my deadline was on the way and I prioritized my moving over it. Maybe writing it more precisely but regardless sometimes the weather or the train prevents these accurate plans. This semi-plan also made me more independent, as I had to handle everything mostly myself. Even though it was stressful, I learned how to stay focused and keep going despite tough challenges.
