The monkey

I went to watch a movie: the monkey that was just realized some time back. While I was enjoying my time the UX/UI in me just spawned and kept looking at the font especially by the start and the end credits of the movie. At the time I had no idea or concept for my portfolio, so I kept this in consideration and did light research to find out its mimicked from this old Bollywood movie: The DON. Both movies have nothing to do with each other, but it did raise a spark in me to look for more things design related and open my eyes and see the world like how a UX/UI designer would.

Reflect:

I really liked how ther was a part in me that automatically thought about the design and font while I was outside of school and having fun. For me this thaught me that learning can happen best when observing correctly and seeing practice come to real life experiences. I will keep my design centric mind open while roaming around wherever I am. Great free tool for in the future = the world is your inspo!
